HIGHER PRICES AT THE PUMP

As you probably already know, fuel prices are not the only thing affected by the increase in crude prices. It also effects all products from plastics to hand lotion.

The effects of the increase in fuel price is interesting because, even with the cures suggested, there are downfalls. The new Hybrid vehicles, such as electric or hydrogen, are a great idea, right? You wouldn't need as much fuel, some run on battery alone, and the government is considering offering tax incentives for people purchasing such vehicles. Where would the downfall be? Well, States tax the fuel we consume in order to maintain the roads. Lower consumption of fuel means less tax money for road maintenance.

The state of Oregon is running a test starting in September where they will monitor 20 vehicles equipped with odometers that can be read at the gas pump. They are proposing a 1.2 cent per mile charge all drivers will have to pay instead of the 24 cents per gallon tax they currently have. This is to compensate for the higher efficiency vehicles driven and the increase in mileage per gallon we now get.

As prices increase so do the cost in transportation of commodities. Some companies are now determining that moving more product at one time will help in keeping cost down, and it does. Rail transportation is one of the solutions in moving higher volumes of commodities. Many companies over the last year have now joined in on our field. They are now finding out what many of us have known for years. This is a wonderful industry to be in!
