TANK CAR SAFETY

Tank car safety has always been a huge issue in the rail industry. Of course terrorist attacks through out the World seem to have augmented the concern of the public and many different groups and agencies. Since the two deadly hazmat accidents in Macdona, TX and Graniteville, SC, the rail industry seems even more committed than ever. The Railway Supply Institute - AAR Tank Car Safety Research and Test Project have been very proactive in working with the Federal Railroad Administration and the AAR making improvements that have resulted in the enhanced safety of tank cars and hazardous commodity transportation since 1970. To date, they have done a terrific job in easing public concerns.

According to the Association of American Railroads, virtually 100% of rail-shipped hazmat arrives at its destination without an accident-induced release. That's amazing when you consider that there are over a million tank car shipments of hazmat every year in North America. A Representative from the BNSF Railroad stated that since the 1970s, the overall rail accident rate has fallen about 80%.

If it appears that the rail industry is patting itself on the back, it should! The rail industry safety record speaks for itself. It's a never ending process that all of us are aware of. Safety First!
