Meeting of the Engineers

Perhaps you have seen the General Electric commercial for cleaner locomotives. The one where the two old timers are shaking hands to the oncoming locomotives and the oncoming soot as well. A humorous scene indeed, and one that actually occurred, minus at least a portion of the soot.

On May 10, 1869, the rails of the Union Pacific met the rails of the Central Pacific in Promontory, Utah to create the first transcontinental railroad. The scene was immortalized by photographer Charles A. Savage, showing the CP chief engineer Samuel S. Montague shaking hands with his UP counterpart Grenville M. Dodge. Union Pacific's locomotive No. 119 and Central Pacific's Jupiter faced each other in the ceremony.

Along with the famous photo, another rail artifact was created just for this occasion. The famed "Golden Spike" was made to ceremoniously "join" the two rails. It was engraved "The Last Spike" and was presented to Leland Stanford of the CP by prominent San Francisco contractor and financier David Hewes. Also presented was a second gold spike by the San Francisco News Letter, a silver spike from Nevada and an iron, silver and gold spike from Arizona. Later that day a regular iron spike was driven, actually completing The Transcontinental Railway.
