The Wild West

Through history the railroads have been a prime target for criminals and outlaws. Many of these outlaws are well known, others not as much. One of the biggest robberies occurred at the Big Springs, Texas Union Pacific station on September 18, 1877. Sam Bass, in his first train robbery, along with Joel Collins and four other men robbed the express train. Finding only a small amount of money in the safe, they broke open some shipments of wooden boxes only to discover $60,000.00 in twenty dollar gold pieces. Along with over a thousand dollars in passenger loot this amounted to the largest haul in history up to that time. Sam Bass was fatally wounded by the Texas Rangers while casing a bank job. He died on July 28, 1878.

On June 2, 1899 Butch Cassidy, Kid Curry and the Wild Bunch held up the Union Pacific Overland Flyer train near Wilcox, Wyoming. When the attendant refused to open it, they blew the express car door, knocking the attendant unconscious. With no one to open the safe they blew it up as well and sent their plunder flying. No one really knows what became of Butch Cassidy. Many said he died in South America, but many also believe he lived out his final days as an entrepreneur in Washington.
