HUNGRY FOR THE FIRST TIME

If your garden is like many, you have begun to notice you have a lot of tomatoes and peppers ripening. Normally the neighbors and family are the beneficiaries of this abundance. All too often you still find some going bad before they can be eaten.

This year you might want to consider giving to a local food pantry. Go to your favorite search engine and type in "Food Bank Supply". With the ongoing economic downturn many families are turning to the food pantries for the first time. For one year in the rail industry alone there have been 15,685 jobs lost. This equals 8.45% of the entire rail workforce.<sup>1</sup>

Even with the $350 million dollars available for actual food purchases made available through The Emergency Food Assistance Program and the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, the web is full of stories of shortages throughout the country.

Fresh produce from your garden would be a welcome addition to many a family table. If you don't have an abundance in your garden or your pocketbook, a grocery bag full of generic canned and dry foods would help tremendously.
