HIGH SPEED RAILROADING

Last April we heard about how President Obama allocated upwards of $8 Billion of the federal stimulus bill to go toward producing high speed rail in and around Chicago and the Midwest. That was then. What is going on now that hasn't been spoken about, but really should be? While debates raged over healthcare reform, the Department of Transportation and President Obama were pushing a different agenda with an even larger budget for high speed rail that has gone overlooked.

The latest bill passed by Congress at the President's quiet but determined urging is a massive project earmarked at $160 billion over the next ten years to build a bullet train from New York to Los Angeles. This would truly connect our country in some form of modern Manifest Destiny. With up-to-date technology these trains can be zipping by at over three hundred miles per hour making that coast to coast trek in a little over ten hours. "Where Europe and Asia have beaten us in the last decade, the next one will belong to America," a spokesman inside the Department of Transportation was quoted in favor of the President's new pet project.

Opponents of the spending have cited numerous reasons, but mostly the already substantial national debt. A concerned citizen voiced an opinion that, "It will be our children who bear the cost of an expensive and dangerous toy of our wasteful administration. " Only time will tell if this is the next wonder of the world or some terrible joke.
