CASEY JONES

John Jones was born on March 14, 1863. John's wife Mary Joanna ("Janie") was once asked how he got his nickname Casey. "Oh, I supposed everyone knew that!" she replied. "He got it from the town of Cayce, Kentucky, near which he was born. The name of the town is locally pronounced in two syllables, exactly like 'Casey'." "My husband's real name was John Luther Jones," she told her interviewer. "He was a loveable lad - 6 feet 4 1/2 inches in height, dark haired and gray-eyed. Always he was in good humor and his Irish heart was as big as his body. All the railroaders were fond of Casey, and his wiper, Wallace Saunders, just worshipped the ground he walked on."

In 1884 at the age of 22 John Jones had recently moved to Jackson, Tennessee to take on the job as flag man for the M&O Railroad. John was christened with his new moniker as he was getting acquainted with his fellow railroaders while sitting around a table in the boarding house run by Janies's mother. Janie, helping to serve the men, fell in love with the "clear-eyed, strong jawed boy" who would blush whenever she flashed him a smile. Casey was soon smitten and on November 25, 1886 they were married at St. Mary's Catholic Church in Jackson, Mississippi. They would go on to buy a house at 211 West Chester Street in Jackson.

Before Casey became famous for his heroic last run, he was well known for his skill with a train whistle. His whistle was made of six long tubes bound together. It's sounding began as a long drawn out note that began softly, rose to a crescendo and then died to a whisper. It was described by some as a whippoorwill call and others as a Viking war cry. Those sleeping along his Illinois Central route, would turn over in their beds late at night upon hearing it and say "There goes Casey Jones".
